

Strategy Knotworking

with Liberating Structures

Your Workbook

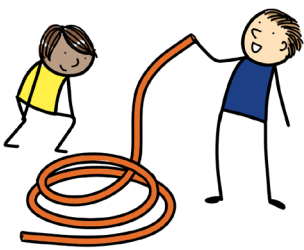

Hey strategizer!

Welcome to your Strategy Knotworking workbook!

Liberating Structures are simple ways to involve and engage everyone in shaping ideas, making decisions, solving problems, and learning together. Instead of relying on presentations, open discussions, or endless meetings, they offer practical structures that make participation easier and more meaningful.

Strategy Knotworking combines several Liberating Structures into a practical approach for developing and continuously refining strategy. Rather than treating strategy as something created by a small group and then rolled out to everyone else, Strategy Knotworking makes strategy a collaborative and ongoing process.

It helps groups explore where they are now, clarify what they want to achieve, identify what might help or get in the way, and translate those insights into concrete actions. As circumstances change and you learn what works, you can revisit the strategy and adjust course.

This workbook contains the illustrations and materials we use to support Strategy Knotworking. Use them to capture ideas, revisit conversations, or as inspiration for facilitating the process yourself.

At the back, you'll find blank pages for notes, reflections, experiments, actions, or anything else worth remembering.

We hope you'll return to this workbook as your strategy evolves. Because strategy is never really finished either.
