

Reiterate The Purpose Of The Product At The Start Of Each Scrum Event

A simple experiment to increase the focus on what is valuable

Purpose Of This Experiment

Scrum makes so much more sense for Scrum teams when they understand the purpose of their product. Unfortunately, Scrum Teams that operate in environments with Zombie Scrum often don't know why their product matters, what their stakeholders need, or what is valuable to them. They end up doing whatever ends up on their Product Backlog without having a sense of it all ties together. Or worse, they don't know the purpose of their product. Or there isn't even a product.

This experiment describes one tiny technique that can create big shifts in how teams experience the Scrum events and the decisions they make during them.

Difficulty / Effort

Required Skill

Provided you have a product purpose, this is an easy one to do.

Impact On Survival

A great start for important conversations.

Steps

To implement this experiment, do the following:

1. Prepare visual aids to communicate the product purpose, like a product vision board or a purpose printed on a banner. You can easily bring these with you into the various Scrum Events. If you don't have a purpose statement at all, refer to "Our Findings" below for suggestions.
2. Begin each Scrum event by reiterating the purpose of the product you're working on. It doesn't have to be literally the first thing you say, but make sure to mention it somewhere in the introduction. It's even better when you tie it to the purpose of the various Scrum Events.
3. For the Sprint Review: "We are developing this product to [purpose]. Let's use this Sprint Review to gather feedback on how the results from this Sprint have helped us make progress on that";
4. For the Sprint Planning: "We are developing this product to [purpose]. Let's use this Sprint Planning to decide what we're going to do this Sprint and how we will be working together to work towards that";
5. For the Sprint Retrospective: "We are developing this product to [purpose]. Let's use this Sprint Retrospective to figure out how we can collaborate more effectively to work towards that";
6. For the Daily Scrum: "We are developing this product to [purpose]. How can we collaborate most effectively in the next 24 hours to work towards that purpose?". You don't have to mention this every time;

Our Findings

- There is a risk of this becoming a mantra that is only mentioned, but not acted on in what happens next. Especially when the product's purpose is abstract and vague. A good way to prevent this is to find different ways or metaphors to express the purpose, let someone else do it each time, or re-invent the product purpose periodically. Keep it fresh.
- If you don't have a purpose statement for your product, this is an excellent opportunity to create the first version. The Liberating Structure "Nine Whys" can be a huge help here. Don't worry about finding the perfect sentence to complete "This product exists in order to"; it's better to have an incomplete, rough sense of why your product matters than no sense at all.

Unleashing Teams All Over The World

We are The Liberators – Barry Overeem and Christiaan Verwijs. Our mission is to create data-driven products to unleash the superpowers of teams all over the world. We do this together with a growing community of patrons.

Awesome content for awesome teams

We unleash teams with our blogposts, our podcast, our newsletter, our videos, and our frequent meetups. While we offer most of this for free, we also have plenty of premium content in our webshop for you to explore.

Supported by the community

We are super proud that The Liberators is almost entirely funded by the community. If you appreciate our work too, you can already support us for 12 dollars/year by becoming a patron. In return, you gain free access to premium content, we share our work-in-progress and involve you in creating more awesome content.

Thank you for respecting our work!

We work hard to create high-quality content that puts you in a position to unleash your team. We're sure you appreciate that a lot of our time and money goes into this. At the same time, content like this is our main source of income. It's what pays our bills :)

If you purchased this content, we ask only that you treat our work with respect and don't share it with people outside your team. If you stumbled on it elsewhere without paying for it, and it offers you value, would you consider supporting us too? You can also check out our other offerings.
